Lies, Liars, and Lying - WhoWhatWhy

Some lies are obvious, and some are very subtle. Some lies are told for a good reason. Some lies are selfish, while some protect others. The essence of a lie is that the liar knows he or she is lying. Lies that erode trust. Over time, most Americans probably lie at least occasionally. But the inference of pervasive daily lying is misleading.

Fortunately, many of our relationship lies are white lies. They're told to spare the feelings of our loved ones and to keep us out of the doghouse (or off the couch). But our personal relationship lies are only one part of our lying behavior. We lie to coworkers and strangers, too. Consider our recent presidential election.
