Number-one New York Times best-selling author Laurie Notaro isn't exactly a domestic goddess - unless that means she fully embraces her genetic hoarding predisposition, sneaks peeks at her husband's daily journal, or has made a list of the people she wants on her Apocalypse Survival team (her husband's not on it). Notaro chronicles her chronic misfortune in the domestic arts, including cooking ...

Different is not a comparative adjective. Thus, when different than first started appearing in English, it sounded grating or less natural to discerning ears. From has been used with the verb differ since at least the 1500s, which paved the way for different from to be readily accepted into the lexicon.

Is It "Different From" Or "Different Than"? - Everything ...

Different from. Yes, but then differently would be describing looks, making it an adverb. I just but a question: how can you say without the sentence looking awkward: "it's no different for men than it is for women.". Anyways this is very helpful. You'd use "differently" if "learning" was the verb "learn" in continuous form (-ing).

grammar - Should it be different or differently? - English ...

"He looks different." vs. "He looks differently.". "Different" is an adjective. "Differently" is an adverb. Use "He looks different." when you want to say that someone's appearance has changed. Use "He looks differently." when you want to say that someone's perspective has changed or that someone's perspective is different than someone else's...

“He looks different.” vs. “He looks differently.” - Kirk ...

Answers. Adverbs can modify nouns. Some examples are: The room looks different from what it was in the other house. One can also write and say: The room looks differently from what it was when one painted it. One can see that both adverbs, different and differently, modify the subject, the room. Both are used correctly and both do the same thing.
