Hi! Thanks so much for the replies. But actually I was trying to say something else. I should have given more context, my bad I meant "It's not like I planned it", as a way of saying, "common, I didn't plan it or anything, it just happened". Something like "it's not like I did it on purpose". How would you say that in Spanish?

I generally don't like reading series (#unpopularopinion) because I'm the type of person that feels the need to stick with the series and finish it even if I don't like it. Sometimes if I'm not a 100% fan of the books I get frustrated waiting for the next book to come out because I'm not excited to read it but I feel like I have to because I ...

review 1: It's Not Like I Planned it This Way was part of a series. I loved the first book and I loved the second book even more! It summarized a normal teenage girl's life and the ups and downs, sad and happy moments, relationships and family problems, (father getting re-married, brother moving out) fighting with friends or watching a friend go through pain.
