You can't claim to love someone yet lie to them; the two things don't match. So here are the five things I've learned from my past failed relationship. 1. When someone cheats or mistreats you, it almost never has anything to do with you. You are good enough even when their actions may have you believe otherwise. 2.

When Someone Cheats or Mistreats You, It's Not About You

But they're a lie. Because it's not him, it's you. You are the reason he's afraid of commitment, or afraid of moving in together, or the reason he's not opening up to you like he used to. You are the reason behind all of those things, behind what feels like a waste of time and a failed relationship.

This way, you have a guy to go to the opera with, a guy to have sex with, a guy who can take you out to fancy dinners, a guy who is in politics, all kinds of opportunities! Think about it, just don't let anybody take up any of your time when it gets clear that they are not into you.

It's Not About HIM! - Have The Relationship You Want

I enjoy his attention though but right now I feel I should rather break up with my boyfriend & focus on me. I have two questions :1. What are the right words to tell this guy I'm not into him? I don't want to hurt his feelings. 2. How do I begin to tell the man I've been with for 5 years that it is not working & it's best to part?
