Lost in Me kept me on my feet with the suspense and putting all of the puzzle pieces together. In here, Hanna, our female protagonist, finds herself waking up in a hospital only without memory of the last past year. Not to mention, she is apparently about to be engaged to life long crush, Max. Sounds like a dream come true, right? Not.

"Can you tell me how Lizzy is related to you?" the nurse asks. "She's my twin sister." "Good," the nurse coos. "Good job. And can you tell me the last thing you remember?" I don't have long to consider her question before she's invading my personal bubble, her face too close to mine as she stares into my eyes. What?

But not so with Lost in Me. Not at all. The last thing Hanna remembers before the apparent fall down the stairs that zapped her memories is being the overweight girl who wanted the unattainable guy. But according to her doctor and everyone else, that was almost a year ago, and it seems that her whole life has changed since then.
