When I found Letters from Thailand in a jumble of second hand books, amongst translations of best selling thrillers and trashy romances discarded at the end of a holiday, I didn't notice A NOVEL printed in thin, white letters on its cover. It was a dull cover, of Chinese sweets stacked on red silk, and the title of the book, with the first word italicised, the second in low-caps and the ...

Letters from Thailand goes some way toward helping. The novel is full of interesting characters. I found myself alternatively rooting for, and dismayed by, the main character, Tan Suang U, a Chinese immigrant who comes to Thailand immediately after World War II. The story follows him and his family as this wave of Chinese immigration slowly ...
