Let The Right One In

At it's worst "Let the Right One In" is far too subtle and slow and nothing like typical horror movies, (if it should be considered one.) At its best its one of the better films we've seen in the last decade. As a foreign film it should see wider American distribution and publicity than any such film since "Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon."

Let the Right One In by John Ajvide Lindqvist - Goodreads

"Let The Right One In will wring your heart while scaring the mortal stuffing out of you [...] both the bleakest and most compassionate of vampire stories. It provides the surface frissons you expect from portraits of the undead, with graphic bloodletting and a couple of great 'gotcha' (in the neck) moments."

Let the Right One In (Official Movie Site) - Starring Kåre ...

"Let the Right One In" is a "vampire movie," but not even remotely what we mean by that term. It is deadly grim. It takes vampires as seriously as the versions of "Nosferatu" by Murnau and Herzog do, and that is very seriously indeed. It is also a painful portrayal of an urgent relationship between two 12-year-olds on the brink of adolescence.
